

Youth Koori Court

Fact sheet

The Youth Koori Court

The Youth Koori Court is part of the Children's Court, which deals with young Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders who have been charged with a criminal offence.

The Youth Koori Court has the same powers as the Children's Court but uses a different court process to:

- involve your family and the Aboriginal community in the court process
- help you better understand what happens at court
- connect you to services that can help you stay out of trouble with the law.

It is not as formal as the Children's Court. You will have a chance to speak for yourself about what is going on in your life.

Elders or respected persons, your family, supporters and any other person in the court room will also have a chance to talk about you and your offending.

This will help the Magistrate decide on the appropriate sentence.

Can I go to the Youth Koori Court?

To go to the Youth Koori Court you must:

- be an Aboriginal person or Torres Strait Islander
- plead guilty to the offence or be found guilty of the offence after hearing
- be between the ages of 10 to 17 years at the time of the offence
- want to have your matter heard in the Youth Koori Court.

Before you start the program, you will meet with the Koori Court Casework Co-ordinator or other caseworker to see if the process is right for you.

At this meeting you might talk about school or work, where you live and what help you need to stay away from Court. This is called a Suitability Assessment.

What happens in the Youth Koori Court?

The Youth Koori Court is informal. Everyone, including you and your lawyer, sit around a table to talk about your offending.

People at the Youth Koori Court may be:

- your family and supporters
- the Magistrate
- Elders and Respected Persons
- a Youth Justice Officer
- a Koori Court Liaison Officer
- staff from support services
- the Police Prosecutor.

You will be given a chance to talk about your feelings and why you chose to come to the Youth Koori Court.

What happens next?

If you are accepted into the Youth Koori Court you will meet with your caseworker to talk about an Action and Support Plan. The plan might set out ways for you to:

- improve your cultural connections
- stay at school or get work

- have stable accommodation
- sort out any health, drug or alcohol issues.

You will come back to the court for a Youth Koori Court Conference.

What will happen at the Youth Koori Court Conference?

At the conference everyone, including you, will talk about what help you need and what you can do to stay out of trouble.

Once everyone has agreed on your Action and Support Plan the Magistrate will approve the plan.

How long does the Youth Koori Court go for?

Most young people spend six to twelve months in the Youth Koori Court.

You will have to come back to court several times for the Magistrate to check on how you are going with the plan.

Your Action and Support Plan might need to change.

What happens when I finish with my plan?

At the end a report will be written on your progress and given to the Court.

This report will help the Magistrate decide how to sentence you.

The sentence will depend on the offence, what you have done to complete the Action and Support Plan, your personal circumstances and whether you have committed other crimes.
